This presentation will explore the politics of the U.S. Campaign for the Academic and Cultural Boycott of Israel in relation to Native American and Indigenous Studies scholars. While the unlawful Israeli occupation of Palestine is an urgent case of genocidal ethnic cleansing and settler colonialism, the politics of indigeneity bring much to bear on critical analyses of Israeli exceptionalism as it is bolstered and bankrolled by American exceptionalism that denies the colonization of Native North America. Within the field of Native American and Indigenous Studies, the study of settler colonialism is a relatively new analytic for inquiry, which to date has mostly focused on the United States and other Anglo settler societies including Canada, Australia, and Aotearoa/New Zealand. Still, scholars within Native American and Indigenous Studies have had a close watch on Palestinian issues of indigeneity and sovereignty given the highly contested history of Israel as a settler state. Israeli policies and state-craft are supported by the ideology of Zionism in claiming the Holy Land as the rightful place for the existence of a sovereign Jewish state. With regard to the latter case, Native American and Indigenous Studies scholars recognize the 20th-21st century state developments forged through Israeli occupation as the re-creation of “Indian Country” in the Holy Land. Commonalities in these two cases studies include the culture and politics of occupation, colonialism, land dispossession and forced removal. Also, as scholar Steven Salaita argues in The Holy Land in Transit: Colonialism and the Quest for Canaan, indigenous resistance to settler violence in both cases has been cast as alternately “savage” or “terroristic.” Comparative examinations of Israeli settler colonialism in relation to questions of occupation, self-determination and decolonization, within the framework of international law demand ethical consideration by scholars positioned within Native American and Indigenous Studies in support of the U.S. Campaign for the Academic and Cultural Boycott of Israel.
