Missions and the Rise of Anglo-American Empire
The Domestic Political Role of the Early American Missions Movement

By Dr. Sam Haselby

Tuesday, April 24, 2012 | West Hall, Auditorium A | 6:00 – 8:00 pm

Sam Haselby is a historian of American political culture. He was a Junior Fellow at the Harvard Society of Fellows (2007-10). He earned his PhD in history at Columbia University and taught at the Bard Prison Initiative and at The New School University. His book The Origins of American Religious Nationalism, 1776-1832, is forthcoming from the University of Chicago Press. He has an article on a heresy trial, and its relation to the largest Native American uprising in U.S. history, forthcoming in the May 2012 Past & Present. He has also written for several popular publications, most recently on politics and religion in American history for The Guardian. 