Biographical Sketch

Born on April 11, 1869, in Kafr ‘Uqāb, ‘Īsá Iskandar al Ma‘lūf descended from a prominent family that traces its origin back to members of al-Ghasāsinah, who established themselves in the Levant between the 17th and 18th centuries. After graduating from al-Shweir English Secondary School, he assumed various teaching positions at various schools in Lebanon and Syria. In 1898, ‘Īsá Iskandar al Ma'lūf married Afifa Ibrahim al-Ma'luf. They had seven children; three of their sons (Fawzi, Shafiq, and Riyad) became famous diaspora poets. Al Ma'lūf was a very cultured man and was one of the key figures in the history of Lebanon when it comes to teaching and developing Arabic language and literature. Over the years, he became a writer, a poet, a journalist, a prominent thinker, an avid historian, a manuscript collector, and a member of the Arab language societies which lead him to be one of the principal figures in Arab Renaissance (annahda al-'arabiyah). His lifetime achievements included editing the newspaper Lubnān, establishing al-Athār magazine in 1911, publishing extensively in various Egyptian, Lebanese, and Syrian magazines, as well as writing about ninety books on a variety of subjects, including history of medicine among the Arabs, history of Levantine cities, genealogy of Levantine families and biographies of rulers. Al Ma'lūf was member of various writers' groups and academies including the Arabic Academy in Damascus, and the Arabic Language Councils in Egypt, Damascus, Brazil, and Lebanon. 'Īsā Iskandar al Ma'luf passed away in Zahleh on July 2, 1956.
