

Dr. Khalil Diab graduated his medical school at the American University of Beirut. He then completed his internal medicine residency at the University of Iowa Hospitals and Clinics in the United States, and his Pulmonary and Critical Care Fellowship at the Indiana University School of Medicine. He worked at Indiana University till December 2018, and then joined the LAU Gilbert and Rose-Marie Chagoury School of Medicine. He is currently Adjunct Associate Professor of Medicine at Indiana University and Clinical Associate Professor of Medicine at the Lebanese American University. His main interests include COPD and lung cancer, both smoking-related diseases.