

Gladys Honein-AbouHaidar is associate professor at the Hariri School of Nursing, AUB. She employs mixed methods approaches to improve the health of communities with a strong attention to the social determinants and their impact on health outcomes especially for under-privileged populations. She works with an interdisciplinary team to develop innovative research underpinned by the principles of equity, inclusiveness and participatory approach to improve equity and quality of services in the community. She uses her research to generate critical knowledge to inform inclusive programming and advance policy change. Her research is often embedded into the research agenda of key stakeholders. She collaborates with the Ministry of Public Health and the Order of Nurses in Lebanon, two major entities influencing policy and practice, on several national capacity building efforts and on the development of national guidelines.
