Preferred Citation: Ras Beirut Oral History Collection, 2013-2014, OH: 301, name of interviewee, American University of Beirut/Library Archives

Scope and Content

Dr. Abunnasr interviewed a group of Ras Beirutis, from different educational backgrounds and social statuses all known as the 'original' families of Ras Beirut. Some of the interviewees descend from families with historical connections to AUB; others are from significant national or ethnic groups; others are prominent or modest businessmen, professionals, and cultural leaders; all are longtime Ras Beirut residents along with some iconic neighbors. Open-ended interviews were conducted by Dr. Maria Abunnasr supported by Dr. Cynthia Minty, and Diana Richani, in the summer of 2014. The participants list includes 63 men and women over the age of seventy. Individuals of this age group would have entered adulthood before the Lebanese Civil War, and lived in Ras Beirut during its heyday. These interviews were compiled into a book to be published by AUB Press, "The Ras Beirut Oral History Project: We are in this Together".

The collection is important for researcher interested in sociology, anthropology, ethnology, psychology, urbanism, and socio-economic and cultural interaction.

Arrangement

The Collection is arranged in four series:

Series I: AUB Alumni

Series II: AUB Faculty

Series III: AUB Staff

Series IV: AUB Neighbors

Background Information

This oral history of Ras Beirut project grew out of one of the many projects sponsored by AUB's Neighborhood Initiative. To many individuals, Ras Beirut possesses a particularly strong sense of multilayered place with a diverse social fabric. The Ras Beirut neighborhood epitomizes what is called "ta'ayush" or coexistence and it is this diversity and spirit of tolerance that is considered special, and somehow different, from other neighborhoods of Beirut, Lebanon, and the region. Drawing on the theoretical framework of memory studies and the practice of oral history, this project documents these claims of Ras Beirut's uniqueness in stories that describe a distant, and in many cases, mourned, past. But far from being an older generation's futile longing for that past, these oral histories demonstrate how individuals and families created this special place. Furthermore, because Ras Beirut has undergone so much change since the end of the Lebanese Civil War, rendering some parts of Ras Beirut unrecognizable to its own inhabitants, it is all the more urgent to document the memory and testimony of Ras Beirut's eldest generation and to provide a multi-vocal record of Ras Beirut's past.

The interviewees were selected based on their religious and ethnic backgrounds and would include notable and less known members of the community. Moreover, interviewees included individuals selected from the 'original' families of Ras Beirut; members of families with historical connections to AUB; prominent business people, professionals, and cultural leaders; small business owners; other longtime residents; and others who were iconic neighbors of AUB (such as Ibrahim Takkoush and Abu Muhammad, the shoe shine man opposite the Main Gate of AUB).

The interview process began in November 2013 and continued through to August 2014. Dr. Maria Bashshur Abunnasr, a historian affiliated with AUB's Center for Arab and Middle Eastern Studies (CAMES), conducted the 63 interviews. The interviews were conducted using the open-ended interview technique particular to life histories, yet they followed a rough sequence of questions under broad headings such as: personal/family history; life pathways (school, work, leisure); urban geography (landmarks, boundaries): and social geography (mixed communities). About 70% of the interviews were conducted in English and about 30% in Arabic. All interviews were digitally recorded by the interviewers. In 2014, the interviews were transcribed with the help of research assistants. AUB Press has approved the manuscript documenting this project and the book entitled The Ras Beirut Oral History Project: We are in this Together is slated for publication in late 2018. The digital recordings, the consent forms, and the transcripts were donated by the Neighborhood Initiative to AUB's Jafet Library's Department of Archives and Special Collections to become part of the permanent record of life in Ras Beirut for the purpose of research.
