

Short Biography:

Dr. Dmitry Konukhov

Dmitry Konukhov, a research associate at CENESS (the Center for Energy and Security Studies) in the Russian Federation. He graduated from the School of Global Studies at Lomonosov Moscow State University and joined Center for Energy and Security Studies shortly after that. He was a Coordinator and Assistant to the Chair of the Moscow Nonproliferation Conference: Nuclear Energy, Disarmament, and Nonproliferation which took place in Russian capital in 2010, 2012 and 2014. His research interests include nuclear nonproliferation and nuclear security with the focus on Russian-US cooperation in this field; information security; protection of critical infrastructure; development of atomic energy use in the Middle East.

Author, co-author and contributor of publications: 'Tajura Nuclear Research Center's 25 Years On: 1984-2009' (2010); 'Natural Dangers and Disasters: Is the Nuclear Industry ready for Emergency Response?' (2010); 'Russia, Myanmar and Nuclear Technologies' (2011); 'Stuxnet: New Form of Cyber Warfare was Tested on Iranian Nuclear Infrastructure?' (2011); 'U.S.-Russian Partnership for Advancing a Nuclear Security Agenda: Recommendation for U.S.-Russian Cooperation in Strengthening Nuclear Security in the Former Soviet States and Southeast Asia' (2012), 'Nunn-Lugar Program Has Ended: What's Next?' (2014); 'RRRRFR Program: Implications for Russian-US Relations and Nonproliferation Regime' (2014); 'Megatons to Megawatts Program: Hard Lessons and New Opportunities for US-Russian Nuclear Cooperation' (2014); 'Western Sanctions Against Russia: Means and Consequences for Nonproliferation' (2014); 'Prospects for Nuclear Power in the Middle East after Fukushima and the Arab Spring. Challenges and Opportunities for Russia' (2015).